
EDITORIAL

We would like to thank once more Michel Hanssens for his outstanding work as Editor in Chief of our Bulletin during more than 10 years. We are committed to continue this task because we believe that our Journal has a future.

First, it is an ideal platform for Belgian ophthalmologists and for our residents to publish their work and we will encourage them doing so. A special section will be dedicated to interesting case reports and informative images. In this issue two case reports are presented. The first one, by Ilse De Veuster, nicely illustrates an uncommon but very instructive case about morning glory disc anomaly. The second case is presented by Patrick De Potter documenting a primary cyst of the iris pigment epithelium. Second, we think that our Bulletin should fulfill an educational task. Twice yearly, a special editorial will be published written by renowned experts. In the next issue, Randy Thomas will teach us simple rules about how to interpret critically the statistics most commonly used in scientific papers. The abstracts of the papers presented at the our yearly meeting as well as the informed consents, once accepted by the Academia Ophthalmologia Belgica, will also be published. Finally, and most importantly, we would like to encourage discussions and invite our readers to write letters to the editors (bulletin@ophthalmologia.be).

Our Bulletin will follow the trend of the other journals. After a short transition period, manuscript submission and the peer review process will be done exclusively online and the instructions for authors will be adapted accordingly. In order to expand readership and promote the citation of the articles published, we strongly recommend writing papers in English. We are dedicated to make our Bulletin attractive and trust having the full support of our section editors, reviewers, and readers.
